

Rice Market Report

Italy: Prices are holding steady, but the major difference is that since the war broke out in the Middle East three weeks ago, farmers have stopped selling. They are convinced that the war will force prices to rise. Meanwhile, white rice mills report having less work because they are no longer selling anything in the Middle East. On the one hand, no one is buying rice anymore, and on the other hand, no one trusts the region enough to send goods there; the risk is too great.

So far, we haven't seen any change in demand, whether for white or parboiled rice.

However, there has been an increase in paddy prices for Carnaroli types and Arborio varieties, as well as for breweries brokens and rejects parboiled. There's less work, therefore less by-product available. Some rice mills are talking about closing during Easter, given the lack of work.

What continues to rise, however, is the cost of container freight and packaging.
